> ADOPTED IN STATE CONVENTION, AT MILWAUKEE, SEPT. 3d, 1862.

Continued.1 It is evident, from what has already been seen, that Washington and Jackson, fit representatives of the sages and patriots of the revolutionary and succeeding eras, regarded sectional parties as revolutionary. Under our system they are essentially so; for no sectional party could accomplish any end, except by the severence of the bonds of fraternity and unity between the different parts of the country upon which the Union rests. It is not we who say, it is the sages and patriots of the past who have said, that in American politics every sectional party is essentially dis-

In almost every State of the Union, in which the Republican party had the power, they enacted laws impeding the execution of the laws of the United States. Such laws were passed by them in this State. A Reublican judiciary for this State nullified acts f Congress, assumed to overrule the decisions of the Supreme Count of the United States in cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the Union, disobeyed its mandates, and sanctioned by judicial decision the forcible rescue of prisoners held under the ET M. great energy and integrity of character and life, the author of the only just and practical solution of the question of slavery in the Territories, whose whole public life was devoted to the maintenance of the Constitution as it is, and the Union as it was; and whose zeal for the preservation of the country sacrificed his life in its prime.

The history of the Convention which nominated Mr. Douglas, plainly shows that the champions of secession had no hope to carry the people of the South with them, save by defeating the candidate of the Democratic party. The whole tone and temper of the Republican leaders and press at the North, before and during the session of the Convention, plainly shows that they had no hope of electing their candidate, save by diverting the South from the Democratic candidate to the Secession candidate. Thus the action of the two sectional parties tended to the same result of the Presidential election. Had Mr. Douglas been elected, secession could not have prevailed at the South, and the several aims of both sectional parties would have been alike defeated.

The result was the defeat of Mr. Douglas. and the election of the Republican candidate.

We have no personal objection to the distinguished gentleman who now sits in the seat of Washington. His election was perhaps less mischievous than that of any other prominent Republican. The evil of his election belongs to his party, not to himself. The good he has done is in a great degree personal to him. Republican as he is, he has not forgotten his old national patriotism. If he has not always, he has often, resisted the abolition element in his party, and stemmed the tide of its revolutionary course. In this he has done the country immeasurable service; and we hope that he will continue to stand as a barrier as well as against the most destructive faction of his own party, as against the armed enemy of the Union. The responsibilities of his position are such as might awe any man; and in all his efforts to sustain the Constitution against revolution and innovation, he has our hearty sympathy and support. The election was the signal for the movement of secession. It was no excuse for the guilt of disunion. The insincerity and bad faith of the leaders in the movement is demonstrated by the fact that in both Houses of Congress there was a safe majority against the Republican party. But the truth is, that the apostles of secession were traitors at heart, independent of the election; and that they wanted and used the election only as a lever to precipitate the South from its allegiance. They duped the South into the belief that the entire people of the North were infected with the leprosy of

As it was, we fully believe that the majority of the whole Southern people stood loyal to the Union, and that in no seceding State, except South Carolina, was the ordinance of secession fairly carried before the people. The election of Mr. Lincoln, though effected by a minority of votes, was carried in all the forms of the Constitution, was obligatory upon all the States and people thereof, was no palliation for the unhallowed act of secession, was no ground for the risks, sufferings, horrors, and ruin of the most shameless and detestable civil war known in the history of civ-

The standard of revolt was raised, and civil war began. Whatever may have been the relative guilt of the two sectional parties in the causes which prepared the South for revolution, the sole guilt in the war itself rests with the Southern party of secession.

Congress has declared the war is waged by the Government of the United States, not in the spirit of conquest or subjugation, nor for the purpose of overthrowing or interfering with the rights or institutions of the States, but to defend and maintain the supremacy of the Constitution, and to preserve the Union with all the dignity, equality and rights of the several States unimpaired; and that as soon as these objects are accomplished, the war ought to cease. Thus carried on, the war is not only expedient, but necessary; not only justifiable, but holy. It is a defensive war. It is a war the wants of our customers to merit and retain the same. of self-preservation. Disunion, once successful, would be a recurring evil; and instead of leaving a Northern Union and a Southern Confederacy, would continue its destructive career until all of the States would be broken and dissevered, until the whole country would be distracted by petty sovereignties and wasted by petty warfare. We cannot calmly conplate disunion. We know and love the blessings of Union, but no human eye can penetrate the dark and terrible future which lies beyond the grave of the Constitution. BROWNING & SLOAN, The war for the preservation of the Constitu tion has all our sympathies, all our hopes, and
